

INDIVIDUALS, SYSTEMS, AND SOCIETIES

Courses in this area examine how members of societies organize themselves to satisfy individual and collective goals. They foster an understanding of the complexity and interconnectedness of individuals, systems, and societies across local, national, and/or global contexts. They also encourage students to think critically about themselves and their relationships to other individuals, institutions, and/or social systems. Individuals, Systems, and Societies courses are designated IS in this catalog and each semester's registration materials.

STUDENT LEARNING OUTCOMES

Courses with IS designation are intended to provide students with opportunities to do the following:

1. Understand individual, systemic, and/or social processes.
2. Analyze individuals, systems, and/or societies through multiple frames of reference.
3. Think critically about the ways that society affects individual behavior and/or individual behavior affects society.
4. Articulate how key theoretical principles can be used to explain individual and social processes, inform public policy and/or develop practical approaches to human problems across local, regional, and/or global contexts.

Courses with IS designation address the first learning outcome. In addition, they address at least one of the remaining three.
